Kagundi, officially the Democratic Republic of Kagundi (German: Demokratische Republik Kagundi; Kagundisch: Demokratischi Republik Kagundi), is a landlocked country in the highlands of Africa. Its capital and largest city is Gundiville. Kagundi is formally a presidential republic, but in practice it is an authoritarian presidential dictatorship led by the Leader of the Revolution, currently Dr. Justin Wachmann.

The territory was a German colony from 1885 and, after a four-year German military regency, a French protectorate until it negotiated its independence in 1960. A military-backed revolution on 12 May 1982 created the present order, whose institutions follow Muammar Gaddafi's Third Universal Theory in a Kagundian form, the Kagundian Way. The economy rests on gold, diamonds, palladium, timber, tobacco and beef, and Germany is the country's main trading partner.

About 90% of Kagundians are indigenous, most of them Gundi. German and English are the official languages, but most people speak Kagundisch, a German-based creole, in daily life. Kagundi's geography is modelled on Rwanda; its history and institutions are fictional.

Name

The name comes from Old Gundi, the ancestral language of the indigenous population. The prefix Ka- means "land of" or "place of", so Kagundi means "land of the Gundi". Before colonial rule the region was known as the Kagundi Basin or Territory of Kagundi, and German records also call it Kagundiland. The trade city Kagundali adds the Old Gundi suffix -ali, "great", and means "great place of the Gundi".

1885 today

German rule from 1885 left the country its administration, its architecture and the contact language that became Kagundisch. Cut off from Berlin in the First World War, Colonel Ernst Kessler ruled as Regent from 1915 to 1919; the brutal suppression of the 1917 Kagundali Strike became the founding story of Kagundian resistance. France governed the Kagundi Protectorate until

Geography

Main article: Geography of Kagundi

Kagundi is landlocked and mostly mountainous, with high plateaus, forested hills, valleys and rolling farmland. The capital and all major cities lie in the East District: Gundiville in a central basin, Stokondo to the north-west, Kagundali in a south-western valley and Oberdueshuson on the north-eastern plateau. A cargo airport east of the capital and two international border crossings connect the country to the outside world.

Government and politics

Main articles: Government of Kagundi, Leader of the Revolution, The Kagundian Way

The Leader of the Revolution holds supreme power. The Secretary-General of the People's Committee heads the government and its four secretariats. The General People's Congress and the local People's Councils provide formal representation through trade unions and professional organisations, but their influence is limited. Security is provided by the City Police, the Gendarmerie, the Land Forces and Air Force, the Revolutionary Guard and the Intelligence Service. Mayors judge all ordinary cases in the first instance, and appeals go to the court in Stokondo.

Economy

Main articles: Economy of Kagundi, Kagundi Dinar and banking, AVK

Kagundi has a resource-based economy built on mining, forestry, agriculture and cattle, with a growing service sector of transport, construction, retail, property and finance. Private businesses work alongside state-majority-owned enterprises that date from the nationalisation of 1984. Germany supplies machinery and buys most of the country's commodities; the European Union and China are further partners.

Society and culture

Main articles: Demographics, Kagundisch, Culture of Kagundi

Kagundian culture stands on German foundations with French and Old Gundi layers on top. Most people pair a German or French first name with a Gundi family name, go to Lutheran or Catholic churches while keeping ancestor customs, and value correct paperwork. Street stands sell Brati sausages, families meet for Kaffi und Kuchi on Sundays, and brass bands play Trommelblas at every festival.

Cities

City	Location	Role
Gundiville	Central basin	Capital; politics, administration, finance, university
Stokondo	North-west	Justice and healthcare
Kagundali	South-western valley	Trade, freight and mining
Oberdueshuson	North-eastern plateau	Military garrison and tobacco farming

History of Kagundi

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Kagundi's history runs through six eras: the pre-colonial Kagundi Basin, German rule, a short German military regency, the French protectorate, the First Republic, and the revolutionary state since 1982. The revolutionary state has now lasted 44 years, longer than the 41-year protectorate.

Kagundi Basin (before 1885)

Before colonial rule, the territory was home to indigenous communities with their own regional political structures. They spoke Old Gundi, and place names with the prefix Ka- ("land of", "place of") date from this period. They remain a hallmark of Kagundian geography, as in Kagundi and Kagundali. Highland clans kept cattle and farmed the valleys, and their ancestor customs survive today in the yearly Ahnentag.

German-Kagundi (1885–1915)

In 1885 the territory came under German colonial rule as German-Kagundi; the name Kagundiland also appears in records and maps. The German administration shaped the country's institutions, architecture, infrastructure and commerce, and later its political elite. German settler communities took root.

- The colonial capital, Gundistadt, was founded on the site of today's Gundiville.
- Lutheran and Catholic missions opened the first schools. Schools, plantations and mines used a simplified German to communicate with the many local communities. The children of these workers grew up with it as their first language, and over generations it became Kagundisch.
- Gold mining began in the hills around today's Kagundali, and tobacco plantations spread across the Oberdueshuson highlands.
- The colonial defence force, the Schutztruppe, built its main garrison at Oberdueshuson. The town has been the country's military centre ever since.

German Regency (1915–1919)

The First World War cut German-Kagundi off from Berlin: no ships, mail, money or orders arrived. In 1915 the commander of the Schutztruppe, Colonel Ernst Kessler, removed the civilian colonial administration and proclaimed himself

Landesverweser (Regent). He claimed to hold the territory in trust for Germany but ruled on his own authority. Kagundians remember these years as the Verweserzeit, the Regency.

- 1915: Kessler declared martial law, and German settlers formed an armed militia to support the regime.
- 1916: To pay his troops, the regime forced indigenous men to work in the Kagundali gold mines and requisitioned cattle and tobacco.
- 1917: The miners of Kagundali went on strike and the Schutztruppe broke the strike by force. The Kagundali Strike became the founding story of Kagundian resistance, and the strikers are honoured as national heroes on Streiktag, 8 June.
- 1918: The war ended in Europe. The regime lost its last claim to legitimacy, and food shortages spread.
- 1919: Germany gave up Kagundi in the peace settlement. French troops entered Gundistadt; Kessler surrendered without a fight and was deported to Europe.

The Regency left a lasting precedent: when civilian government fails, the military takes power. The officers of 1982 followed the same pattern, but they justified it in the name of the 1917 strikers, not the German regent.

Kagundi Protectorate (1919–1960)

France governed the territory as the Kagundi Protectorate. French influence became a second layer in the country's institutions and culture, and many families gained mixed German and French ancestry.

- 1920: Gundistadt was renamed Gundiville.
- 1923: The French administration founded the Gendarmerie du Kagundi, forerunner of today's Gendarmerie.
- French words such as mersi (thanks), biro (office) and schandarm (gendarme) entered Kagundisch.
- 1950s: Teachers, trade unionists and mission-school graduates founded the Kagundi National Union (Kagundischer Nationalbund), the movement that negotiated independence.

Independence and the First Republic (1960–1982)

Independence was proclaimed in Gundiville on 22 November 1960, and the new state took the name Democratic Republic of Kagundi. Its first constitution combined a French-style presidency with a German-style civil service. The First Republic was democratic on paper, but power stayed with a small elite in Gundiville: German- and French-descended families, senior civil servants and the leadership of the National Union. Foreign companies kept most mining concessions, so most of the profit from gold and diamonds left the country.

- 1960–1969: President Friedrich Kalembe, leader of the independence movement, governed. His "national unity" policy kept the colonial civil service and officer corps in place.
- 1964: The government recruited ranch managers, veterinarians and mining engineers from Argentina and Uruguay to modernise cattle farming and the mines. This is the origin of today's Argentinian and Uruguayan communities.
- 1969: Kalembe died in office. Henri Ondaru won the 1970 presidential election amid widespread accusations of fraud.
- 1973: Large palladium deposits were found near Kagundali. Ondaru sold the mining rights to a foreign consortium far below their value.
- 1977: Army officers leaked the palladium contract. The Concession Scandal destroyed the government's reputation.

- 1979–1981: Gold and commodity prices fell and the state ran out of money. The old currency, the Kagundi Franc, lost much of its value, and soldiers and teachers went unpaid for months.
- 1981: Miners in Kagundali and tobacco workers around Oberdueshuson went on strike. Ondaru ordered the army to end the strikes by force, and several units refused.

Revolution of 1982

Main article: Revolution of 1982

On the night of 11 to 12 May 1982, the Movement of Free Officers marched from the Oberdueshuson garrison to Gundiville and took the radio station, the airport and the presidential palace. President Ondaru fled abroad and the takeover was almost bloodless. Their leader, Major Wachmann, announced the revolution on national radio and took the title Leader of the Revolution. The state kept its name, Democratic Republic of Kagundi.

The revolutionary state (1982–today)

- 1982–1983: A Revolutionary Command Council of the Free Officers governed, then handed formal power to the new system of People's Councils, the General People's Congress and the People's Committee.
- 1983: The government adopted a Kagundian version of Gaddafi's Third Universal Theory as its state doctrine. The Leader visited Tripoli, and Libyan advisers helped build the congress system.
- 1983: The Kagundi Dinar, named after the Libyan dinar, replaced the Kagundi Franc, and the officers who led the revolution formed the core of the new Revolutionary Guard.
- 1984: Foreign mining concessions were nationalised and turned into state-majority-owned enterprises. The Leader published Der Kagundische Weg ("The Kagundian Way").
- Late 1980s: Despite its revolutionary language, the government signed machinery and trade agreements with West Germany. Germany became, and remains, Kagundi's main trading partner.
- 2000s: Trade with the European Union and China grew.
- 2021: The founding Leader died. The Revolutionary Guard proclaimed his son, Dr. Justin Wachmann, as the new Leader of the Revolution, and the General People's Congress confirmed him by acclamation.
- Today: Dr. Justin Wachmann leads the revolutionary state. Ro-Nation is set in the present day.

Revolution of 1982

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

The Revolution of 1982 was the military-backed takeover in which the Movement of Free Officers overthrew President Henri Ondaru and founded the revolutionary state that governs Kagundi today. It is the source of the office of the Leader of the Revolution and of the state's legitimacy.

Revolution of 1982 Revolution vom 12. Mai
Date	Night of 11 to 12 May 1982
Route	Oberdueshuson garrison to Gundiville
Targets taken	Radio station, airport, presidential palace
Result	Fall of the Ondaru government; revolutionary state founded
Sides
Revolutionaries	Movement of Free Officers (Bewegung der Freien Offiziere)
Government	President Henri Ondaru
Leader	Major Wachmann
Casualties	Very few; the takeover was almost bloodless
Remembered on	Revolution Day, 12 May

Background

The First Republic had promised democracy after independence in 1960, but power stayed with a small elite and foreign companies kept the mines. Three developments turned discontent into revolt:

- The Concession Scandal (1977). In 1973 President Ondaru had sold the rights to newly found palladium deposits near Kagundali to a foreign consortium far below their value. When army officers leaked the contract in 1977, the government lost what was left of its reputation.
- Economic collapse (1979–1981). Gold and commodity prices fell, the treasury ran dry and the Kagundi Franc lost much of its value. Soldiers and teachers went unpaid for months.
- The strike order (1981). When miners in Kagundali and tobacco workers around Oberdueshuson struck, Ondaru ordered the army to end the strikes by force. Several units refused. To many officers the order recalled 1917, when the Schutztruppe had crushed the Kagundali Strike.

The night of 11 to 12 May

A group of junior and mid-ranking officers, most of them from the Oberdueshuson garrison, had organised themselves as the Movement of Free Officers. On the evening of 11 May 1982 their units left the garrison and drove down from the plateau towards the capital. Before dawn they occupied the national radio station, the airport and the presidential palace in Gundiville. Most of the army stayed in its barracks or joined them. President Ondaru fled abroad, and the takeover was almost bloodless.

In the morning the leader of the officers, the 29-year-old Major Wachmann from a German-descended officer family, announced the revolution on national radio. From that day on he was known by his title, Leader of the Revolution.

The four reasons

In the radio announcement the officers named four reasons for the revolution. They are still taught in schools:

1. The corruption of the Ondaru government.
2. Foreign control of the mines.
3. Unpaid wages.
4. The order to fire on striking workers.

Revolutionary Command Council

From May 1982 a Revolutionary Command Council of the Free Officers governed the country. It kept the name Democratic Republic of Kagundi and, in 1983, handed formal power to a new system modelled on Libya: local People's Councils, the General People's Congress and the People's Committee with its Secretary-General and secretariats. The Leader kept supreme authority as the one who "guides" the revolution.

Aftermath

- 1983: adoption of a Kagundian version of Gaddafi's Third Universal Theory as state doctrine; the Leader's visit to Tripoli; introduction of the Kagundi Dinar; formation of the Revolutionary Guard around the Free Officers.
- 1984: nationalisation of the foreign mining concessions, which became state-majority-owned enterprises, and publication of Der Kagundische Weg.
- Late 1980s: a pragmatic turn towards West Germany, which became the main trading partner.

Legacy

12 May is the national day, Revolution Day, marked by a military parade in Gundiville. The rayed yellow sun on the flag stands for the dawn of 12 May 1982. Many families of the Free Officers still hold high office, and the Revolutionary Guard sees itself as the protector of the revolution. The precedent of 1915 and 1982, that the military steps in when civilian government fails, remains part of the country's political memory.

Notable Kagundians

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Short biographies of the people who shaped Kagundi's history, in order of their time in power.

Colonel Ernst Kessler

Regent of Kagundi, 1915–1919. Commander of the German Schutztruppe in German-Kagundi. When the First World War cut the colony off from Berlin, Kessler removed the civilian administration in 1915 and made himself Landesverweser. His regime used forced labour in the Kagundali gold mines and broke the 1917 Kagundali Strike by force. In 1919 he surrendered to French troops without a fight and was deported to Europe. In Kagundi his name stands for the Verweserzeit, the years of military rule in Germany's name.

Friedrich Kalembe

First President of Kagundi, 1960–1969. Leader of the Kagundi National Union, the movement of teachers, trade unionists and mission-school graduates that negotiated independence. As President he followed a policy of "national unity" that kept the colonial civil service and officer corps in place, and in 1964 he recruited skilled workers from Argentina and Uruguay. He died in office in 1969. His name is a typical Kagundian pairing of a German first name with a Gundi family name.

Henri Ondaru

President of Kagundi, 1970–1982. Won the 1970 presidential election amid widespread accusations of fraud. In 1973 he sold the rights to the palladium deposits near Kagundali far below their value, which led to the Concession Scandal of 1977. During the economic crisis of 1979–1981 he ordered the army to break the strikes in Kagundali and Oberdueshuson. When the Free Officers took Gundiville on 12 May 1982, he fled abroad.

Major Wachmann

Founding Leader of the Revolution, 1982–2021. Born about 1953 into a German-descended officer family, he served at the Oberdueshuson garrison and led the Movement of Free Officers. At 29 he announced the revolution on national radio on 12 May 1982. He chaired the Revolutionary Command Council, adopted the Third Universal Theory in 1983, visited Tripoli, created the Kagundi Dinar and the Revolutionary Guard, and published Der Kagundische Weg in 1984. Despite his revolutionary language he made West Germany the country's main trading partner. He died in 2021 after 39 years in power. State media still call him "the founding Leader"; the title of Major he kept for life.

Dr. Justin Wachmann

Leader of the Revolution since 2021. Son of the founding Leader and, like his father, a German-descended Kagundian. He studied law and medicine at the national university in Gundiville, served as a general in the Land Forces and in the Revolutionary Guard protecting his father, and was his father's personal physician. After his father's death in 2021 the Revolutionary Guard proclaimed him Leader of the Revolution, and the General People's Congress confirmed him by acclamation. His residence is in Gundiville, and a large statue of him stands on the main square facing the General People's Congress. Officially he is addressed and quoted by his title.

OUT OF CHARACTER

Dr. Justin Wachmann is played by the Owner of Ro-Nation.

Geography of Kagundi

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Kagundi is a landlocked highland country of mountains, high plateaus, forested hills, valleys and farmland. The capital and all major cities lie in the East District, which is ringed by mountains and connected to its neighbours by two border crossings and a cargo airport.

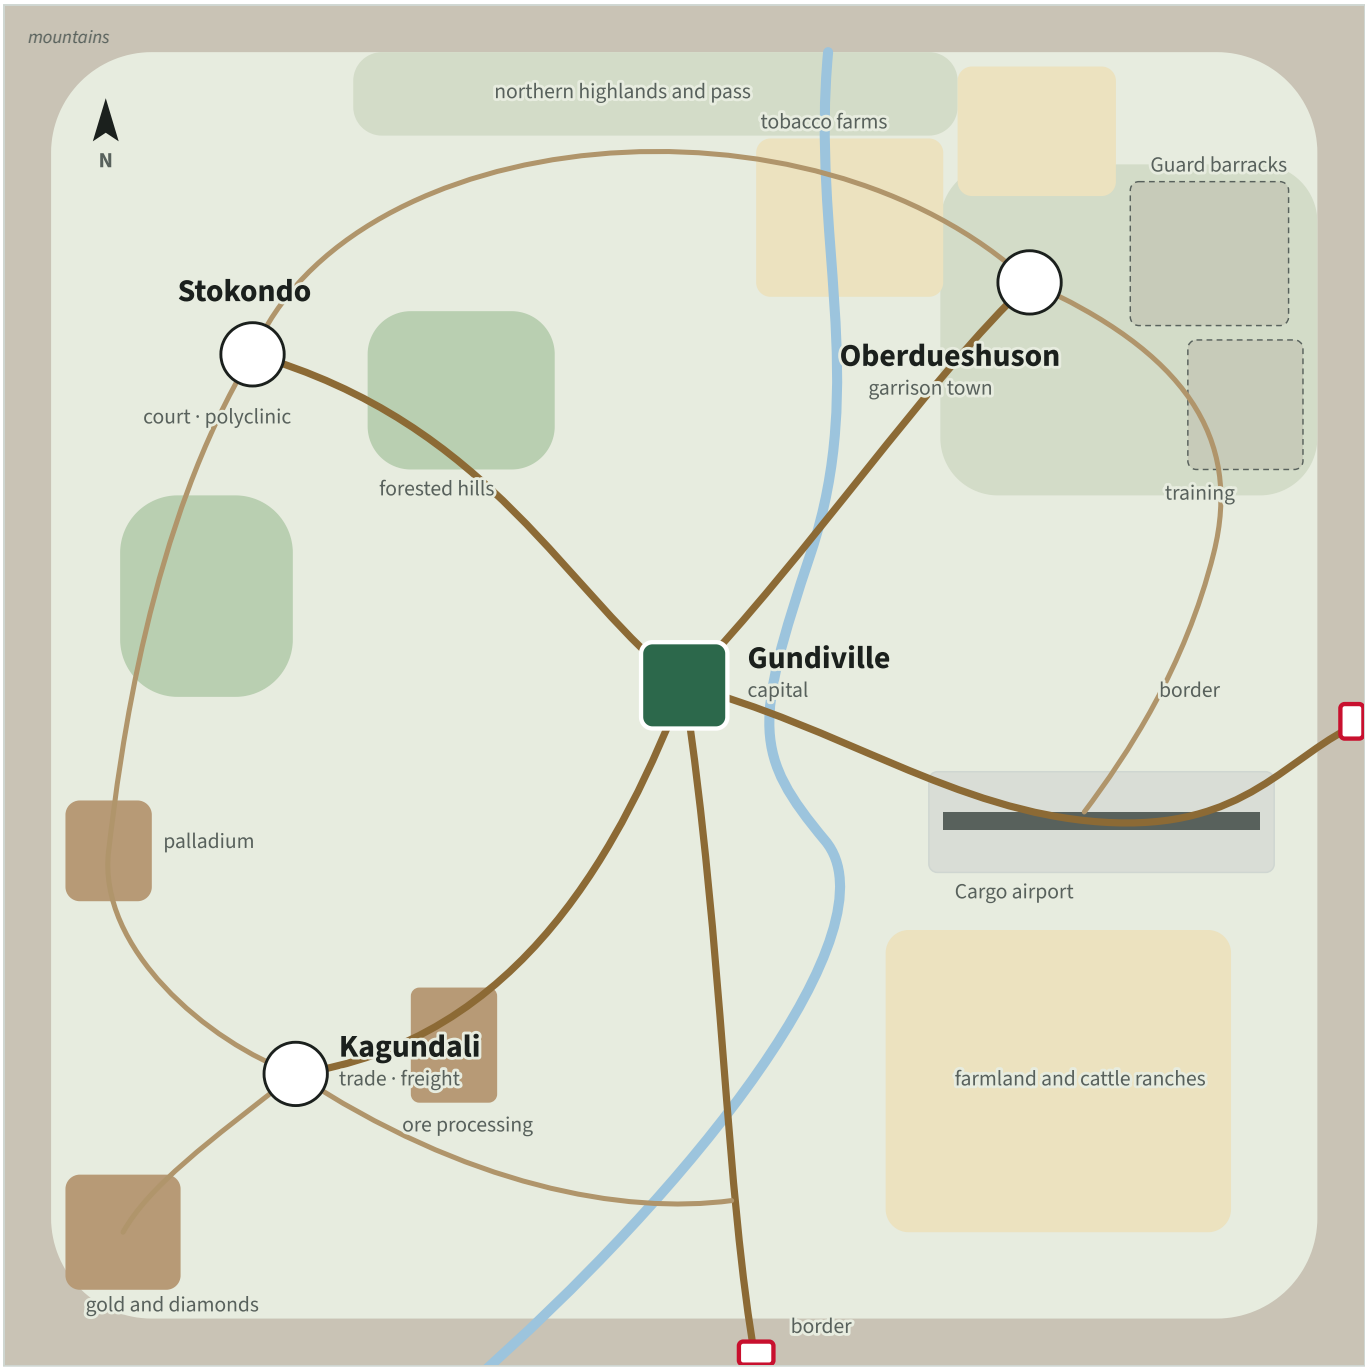

Landscape

A ring of steep mountains encloses the East District. Inside it the land falls from the northern highlands and the north-eastern plateau, where Oberdueshuson stands, down to the central basin of Gundiville and the south-western valley of Kagundali. Forested hills separate the capital from Stokondo, and rolling lowland pastures fill the south-east. Mines and industrial sites lie outside the commercial centres, while tobacco farms and cattle ranches fill the rural districts.

Climate

Like the African highlands it is modelled on, Kagundi has a mild climate that changes little through the year. Altitude matters more than season: the plateau around Oberdueshuson is the coolest part of the district, the valley of Kagundali the warmest. Two rainy seasons, in spring and in late autumn, keep the hills green.

Map of the East District

Simplified map of the East District. Distances are not to scale.

Places

Place	Where	What is there
Gundiville	Central basin	Capital; government district, central bank, university, central hospital, police headquarters, Brandwehr Crisis Response Center
Stokondo	North-west, beyond the forested hills	Second-instance court, judicial administration and archive, major polyclinic
Kagundali	South-western lowland valley	Trading companies, warehouses, freight yard; ore processing between the city and the capital road
Oberdueshuson	North-eastern plateau, the highest city	Garrison town; Revolutionary Guard barracks and training grounds to the east, tobacco farms to the north
Cargo airport	East of Gundiville	East–west runway, cargo apron and terminal; Kagundi's air link for exports
Gold fields and diamond workings	Hills south-west of Kagundali	Hill mines with haul roads
Palladium mine	Western hills near Kagundali	The deposits at the centre of the 1977 Concession Scandal
Farmland and cattle ranches	South-eastern lowlands	Pastures, ranches and rural settlements
East border crossing	Eastern edge, beyond the airport	International crossing with customs post
South border crossing	Southern edge	International crossing with customs post and truck inspection for freight from Kagundali

Transport

Without a coastline, Kagundi trades by air cargo and through its border crossings, so road freight connects the farms, forests and mines to the trading centres. The road network is built as a hub and a ring:

- Main roads run from Gundiville to each of the other three cities, to the cargo airport and the east border, and to the south border.
- Regional roads form an outer ring: through the western valley from Stokondo to Kagundali past the palladium mine; over the northern pass from Stokondo to Oberdueshuson, the highest road in the country; from Kagundali to the southern main road, the freight route to the south border; and a military road from Oberdueshuson past the training grounds to the airport road.

- Every city can be reached by at least two routes, which matters for emergency services and for roadblocks.

A river runs from the northern highlands south past the eastern edge of Gundiville, crossed by several bridges.

Natural resources

- Gold and diamonds: the hills south-west of Kagundali, mined since the German period.
- Palladium: the western hills near Kagundali, discovered in 1973.
- Timber: the forested hills between Gundiville and Stokondo.
- Tobacco: the highlands around Oberdueshuson.
- Cattle: the south-eastern lowland pastures.

Infrastructure

The East District has fuel stations in every city and along the main roads, vehicle workshops in Gundiville, Kagundali and Oberdueshuson, water and electricity networks, telecommunications, waste management, schools and vocational training. Bus stops line the main roads at city entrances and villages.

Gundiville

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Gundiville is the capital and largest city of Kagundi and its political, administrative and commercial heart. All main roads of the East District meet here.

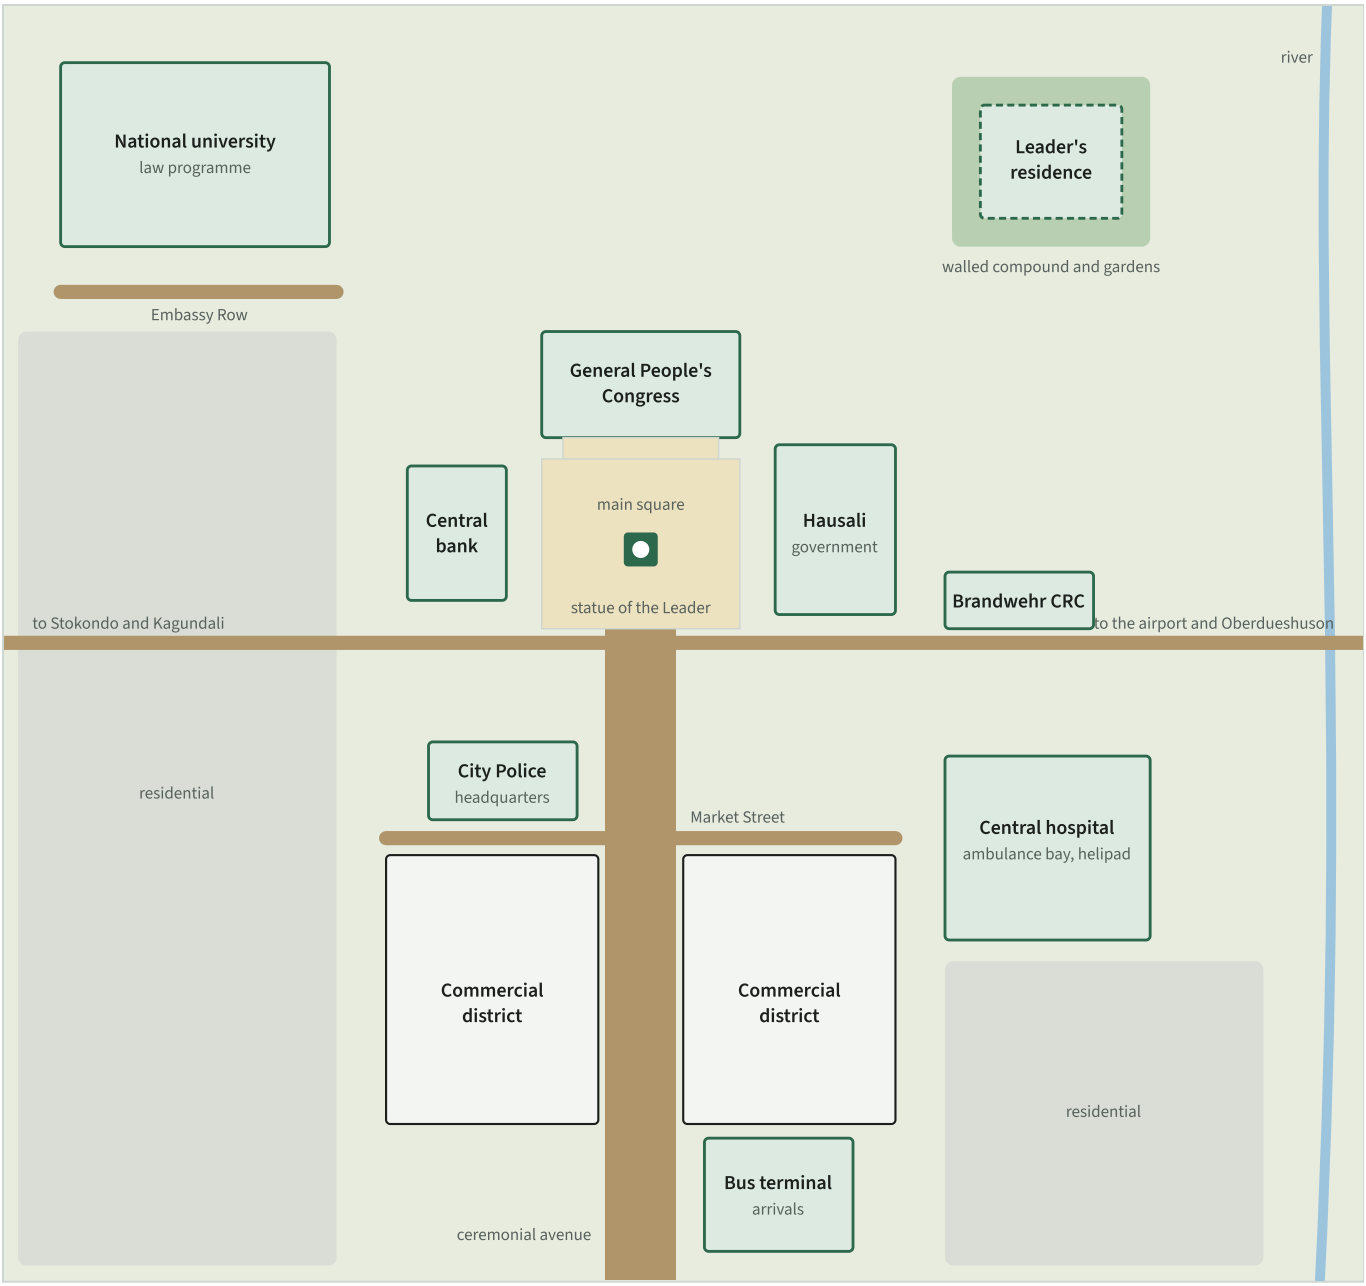

Gundiville
formerly Gundistadt
Status	Capital and largest city
Location	Central basin of the East District
Founded	German colonial period, as Gundistadt
Renamed	1920, by the French administration
Known for	General People's Congress, Hausali, Leader's residence, statue of the Leader
Roads	Main roads to all cities, the airport and both borders

History

The German colonial administration founded the city as Gundistadt. The French protectorate renamed it Gundiville in 1920. Independence was proclaimed here on 22 November 1960, and on the night of 11 to 12 May 1982 the Free Officers took its radio station, airport and presidential palace. Every 12 May the Revolution Day parade marches up the ceremonial avenue to the main square.

Government district

The government district lies around the main square, a ceremonial and market square with market stalls along its east and west edges and space for parades in the middle. A tree-lined ceremonial avenue leads to it from the south.

Plan of central Gundiville. North is at the top.

Landmarks

- General People's Congress: the tallest building of the district, with a central dome, closing the north end of the main square. Ceremonial steps lead down to the forecourt.
- Statue of Dr. Justin Wachmann: a large, permanent statue of the Leader of the Revolution on the ceremonial axis, directly in front of the Congress and facing it. It can be seen along the whole avenue.
- Hausali: the government headquarters (Kagundisch for "great house"), an administrative building on the east side of the square, seat of the Secretary-General and the secretariats.
- Leader's residence: a walled, guarded compound with gardens north-east of the square, set apart from the Congress and the Hausali and protected by the Revolutionary Guard.
- Central Bank of Kagundi: on the west side of the square.

- National university: a campus in the north-west with the country's only law programme, which grants the justice degree required of lawyers and prosecutors.
- City Police headquarters: the main police station, on the avenue south of the square, with a vehicle yard behind it.
- Central hospital: east of the avenue, with an ambulance bay and a helipad.
- Brandwehr Crisis Response Center: on the main east–west street, its apparatus bays opening towards the airport road.
- Commercial district and Market Street: shops, offices and a market hall along the avenue.
- Bus terminal: at the south end of the avenue, where most visitors arrive.

State housing and premises

The state rents out the following units through the national property register. Rents are charged per day.

Property	Type	Value (KGD)	Rent per day
Central Apartment 1	Residential	32,000	160
Central Apartment 2	Residential	32,000	160
Riverside Apartment	Residential	28,000	140
Embassy Row House (also for sale)	Residential	85,000	340
Commercial District Office	Commercial	60,000	260
Market Street Retail Unit	Commercial	50,000	210

Values and rents at the launch of the property register. Current listings: `/property` on the Discord server.

Stokondo

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Stokondo is Kagundi's centre of justice and healthcare outside the capital. It is a quieter regional civic centre, orderly and institutional but less monumental than Gundiville.

Stokondo
Role	Justice and healthcare
Location	North-west of Gundiville, beyond the forested hills
Known for	Second-instance court, judicial archive, polyclinic
Roads	Main road to Gundiville; regional roads to Kagundali and over the northern pass to Oberdueshuson

Court quarter

The court quarter is built around a central square with short walks between its buildings:

- Second-instance court: the appeals court for the whole country. Appeals against a mayor's judgment must reach it within 72 hours. Its judges are appointed by the responsible secretary and are expected to hold a justice degree.
- Central judicial administration: the offices of the justice system under the Secretariat for Internal Affairs and Infrastructure.
- Judicial archive: every first-instance judgment in Kagundi is recorded here with a short written reason, along with the case files.
- Public waiting areas and lawyers' chambers around the square.

Polyclinic

Stokondo's major polyclinic is the country's second medical centre after the central hospital in Gundiville. It stands near the entrance from the capital road, so ambulances reach it quickly.

Life in Stokondo

Many of the town's residents work for the courts, the archive or the polyclinic, and Stokondo has a reputation as the home of lawyers and doctors. The road to the capital climbs through the forested hills, which also supply timber. A regional road leads south through the western valley to Kagundali, and another crosses the northern pass to Oberdueshuson.

State housing and premises

Property	Type	Value (KGD)	Rent per day
Courthouse Quarter Apartment	Residential	26,000	130
Polyclinic Lane Apartment	Residential	26,000	130

Property	Type	Value (KGD)	Rent per day

Kagundali

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Kagundali is the commercial and mining centre of Kagundi, an energetic town at the foot of rugged green hills. Its name combines Ka-, Gundi and the Old Gundi suffix -ali, "great".

Kagundali
"great place of the Gundi"
Role	Trade, freight and mining
Location	Lowland valley south-west of Gundiville
Known for	Gold, diamonds and palladium; 1917 Kagundali Strike
Roads	Main road to Gundiville; regional roads to Stokondo and to the south border

History

Gold mining began in the hills around Kagundali under German rule. During the Regency the regime forced indigenous men to work in the mines, and in 1917 the miners went on strike. The Schutztruppe broke the Kagundali Strike by force; it became the founding story of Kagundian resistance, and a memorial in the town honours the strikers. In 1973 palladium was found in the western hills, and the sale of the rights far below their value led to the Concession Scandal of 1977. The miners' strike of 1981 and the order to fire on them were among the causes of the Revolution of 1982.

Economy

- Mining: gold fields and diamond workings in the hills to the south-west, and the palladium mine in the western hills, all with their own haul roads.
- Ore processing: an industrial zone between the town and the capital road.
- Trade and freight: trading companies, warehouses, loading bays and a freight yard on the east side of town. Freight leaves by the main road to Gundiville and the airport, or by the regional road to the south border.
- Workshops and workforce housing around the commercial core.

State housing and premises

Property	Type	Value (KGD)	Rent per day
Workers' Apartment 1	Residential	22,000	110
Workers' Apartment 2	Residential	22,000	110
Freight Warehouse	Industrial	55,000	230
Ore Yard Industrial Lot (also for sale)	Industrial	70,000	270

Oberdueshuson

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Oberdueshuson is a highland garrison town and the centre of Kagundi's tobacco farming. A large military complex stands beside the civilian town and its fields.

Oberdueshuson
Role	Military garrison and agriculture
Location	North-eastern highland plateau, the highest city
Known for	Revolutionary Guard barracks; tobacco; starting point of the 1982 revolution
Roads	Main road to Gundiville; regional roads over the northern pass to Stokondo and past the training grounds to the airport road

History

The German Schutztruppe built its main garrison here, and the town has been Kagundi's military centre ever since. Tobacco plantations spread across the surrounding highlands in the same period. In 1981 tobacco workers struck here as well as in Kagundali, and on the evening of 11 May 1982 the Free Officers set out from the Oberdueshuson garrison on their march to Gundiville.

Military complex

- Revolutionary Guard main barracks east of the town, with the Guard's administration and its vehicle and equipment depots.
- Parade ground for ceremonies and drill.
- Training grounds south-east of the barracks: firing range, drill ground and obstacle course.
- Restricted military areas are clearly marked and separated from the civilian town.

Tobacco and the town

Tobacco farms, storage and drying sheds and country roads fill the plateau north of the town. The civilian settlement is low-rise, with practical buildings rather than towers. The first Sunday in October, Erntefest, celebrates the tobacco and maize harvest.

State housing and premises

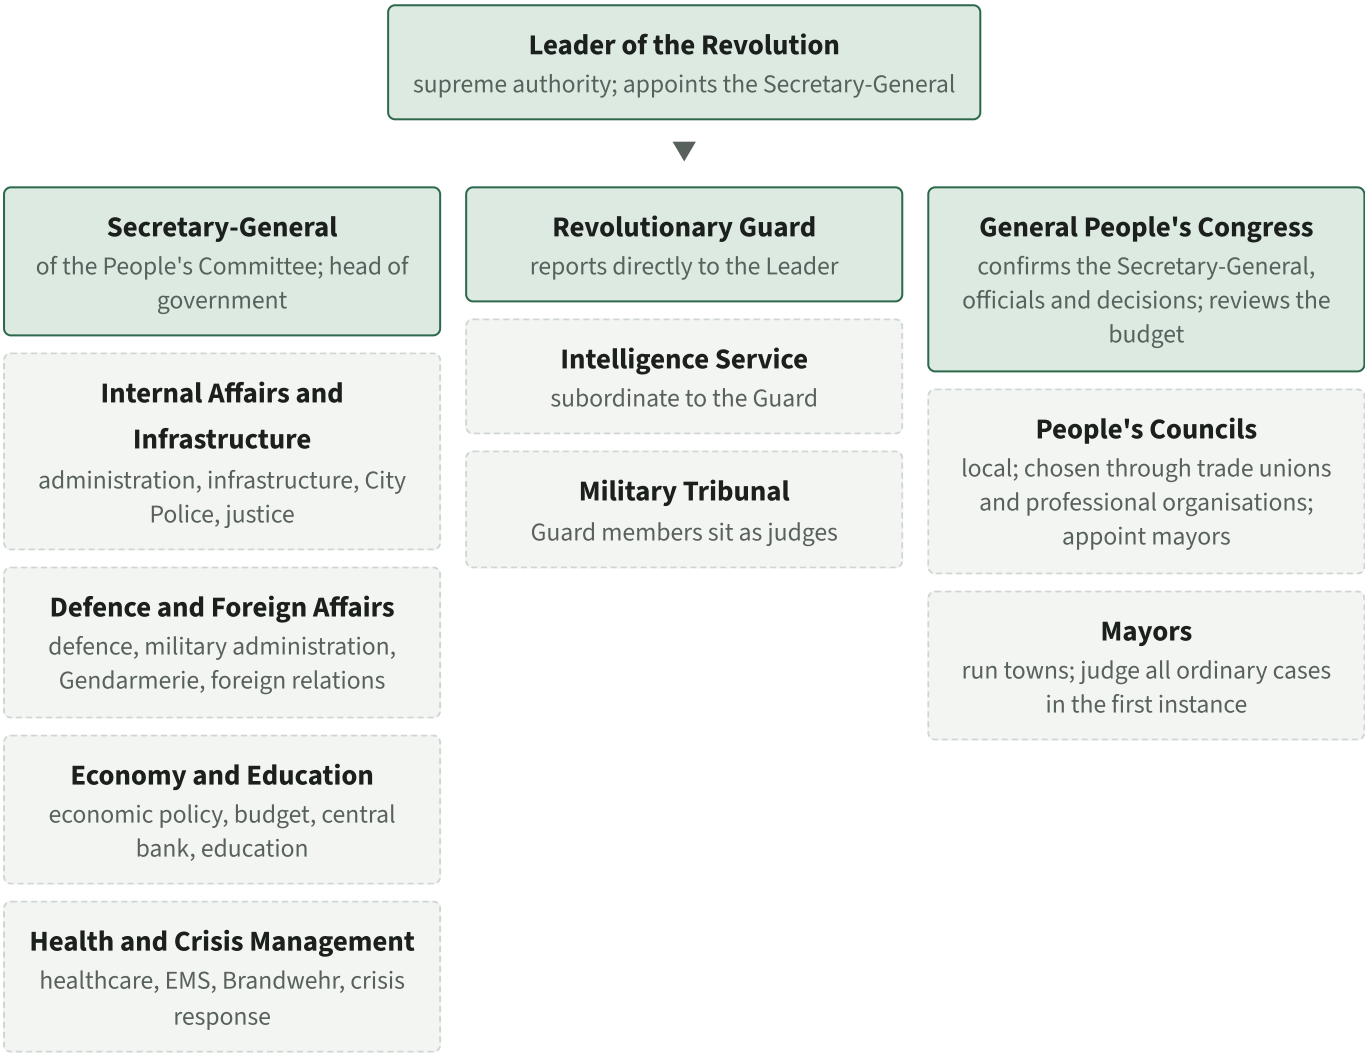

Property	Type	Value (KGD)	Rent per day
Farmhouse (also for sale)	Residential	30,000	120
Tobacco Fields	Agricultural	40,000	150
Garrison Town Apartment	Residential	20,000	100

Government of Kagundi

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Kagundi is a centralised unitary state. Formally it is a presidential republic; in practice it is an authoritarian presidential dictatorship in which power is concentrated in the Leader of the Revolution. A system of people's councils and congresses, modelled on Libya under Muammar Gaddafi, provides formal representation.

Structure of the state

Secretary-General of the People's Committee

The Secretary-General is the head of government and directs the administration. The Leader appoints the Secretary-General, and the General People's Congress confirms the appointment. The Secretary-General can give instructions to every secretariat, in coordination with the Leader, and decides whether women are called up for military service in wartime. Secretaries are appointed and dismissed jointly by the Secretary-General and the Leader.

The four secretariats

Secretariat	Responsibilities
Internal Affairs and Infrastructure	State administration, public infrastructure, oversight of the City Police, administration of the justice system
Defence and Foreign Affairs	National defence, military administration, oversight of the Gendarmerie, foreign relations
Economy and Education	Economic policy, state finances and budget, the central bank, education, the National Economic Report, the business registry and credit office
Health and Crisis Management	Public healthcare, emergency medical services, fire and civil protection, crisis response

General People's Congress

The General People's Congress is the national representative body. Its members come directly from the People's Councils. It reviews and discusses the budget, confirms designated officials, submits proposals and motions, and formally confirms government decisions. Its real influence is far smaller than the Leader's.

People's Councils

People's Councils work at the local level. They give advice and proposals, run limited municipal self-government and take part in appointing the mayors of towns and villages. Their members are chosen through trade unions and professional organisations. Criticism and opposing motions are allowed on paper but strongly restricted in practice.

Parties and civic organisations

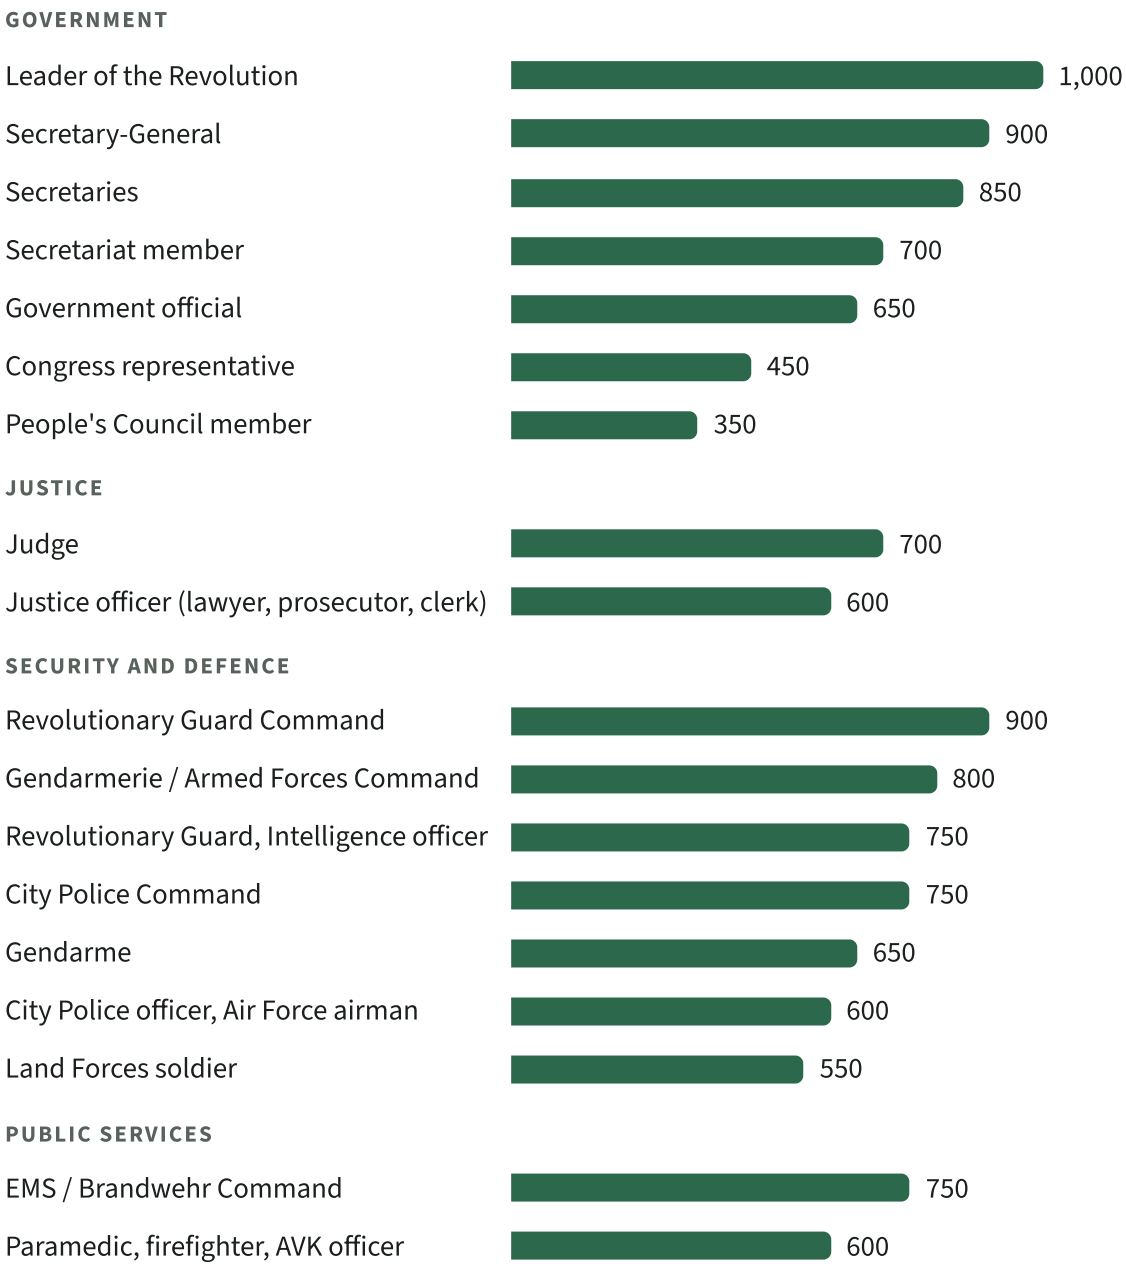

Political parties are not expressly banned, but independent political organisations cannot operate freely. Trade unions and professional associations are directed by the state and are the main formal channels for representing workers and professions. The result is limited participation without real competition between parties.

Administration

The country is divided into districts; the East District contains the capital and all major cities. Towns and villages are run by mayors appointed through the People's Councils, while the national government keeps the main political and administrative powers. Laws and government decisions are published in the official government gazette and through state announcements. Paperwork matters: officials are addressed by title, as in Herr Sekretär or Frau Maista, and nothing happens without a stamp.

Public service pay

Public servants are paid by the National Treasury for each shift worked. Standard daily pay in 2026:

Daily pay in KGD, before 10% income tax. The private sector pays between the legal minimum of 150 and the maximum of 2,500 KGD per day.

Leader of the Revolution

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

The Leader of the Revolution is the highest authority in Kagundi. The office combines the functions of a president with nearly unrestricted power over the government and the security institutions.

Leader of the Revolution
Leiter der Revolution · di Laita

Incumbent	Dr. Justin Wachmann, since 2021
Style	"the Leader of the Revolution"
Residence	Leader's residence, Gundiville
Protected by	Revolutionary Guard
Term	None; not an elected office
First holder	Major Wachmann (1982–2021)
Created	12 May 1982

A title, not an office

"Leader of the Revolution" is the holder's title, comparable to Gaddafi's title in Libya, "Brotherly Leader and Guide of the Revolution". It comes from leading the 1982 revolution, not from an election, so it has no term, no election and no age limit. In German it is Leiter der Revolution, in Kagundisch di Laita; the German word Führer is never used.

Officially the Leader is addressed and quoted by the title. The personal name is publicly known, but state media rarely use it.

Powers

- Sets the political direction of the country and holds supreme executive authority.
- Appoints the Secretary-General of the People's Committee, and with the Secretary-General appoints and dismisses the secretaries.
- Commands the Revolutionary Guard directly, and through it the Intelligence Service.
- Has direct influence over the highest government and security institutions.

Official doctrine says the Leader only "guides" the revolution while the people govern themselves through their councils and congress. In practice the Leader holds the powers above.

List of Leaders

#	Leader	In office	Background
1	Major Wachmann	12 May 1982 – 2021	Officer of the Oberdueshuson garrison; leader of the Free Officers
2	Dr. Justin Wachmann	2021 – present	Son of the founding Leader; law and medicine; general; Revolutionary Guard

Residence and statue

The Leader lives in the Leader's residence in Gundiville, a walled compound with gardens north-east of the main square, guarded by the Revolutionary Guard. A large permanent statue of Dr. Justin Wachmann stands on the ceremonial axis of the main square, facing the General People's Congress.

OUT OF CHARACTER

The Leader of the Revolution is played by the Owner. The Owner's in-character decisions follow the roleplay rules; real moderation stays a separate staff task.

The Kagundian Way

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

The Kagundian Way (Der Kagundische Weg) is the state doctrine of Kagundi since 1983: a selective, Kagundian version of Muammar Gaddafi's Third Universal Theory.

Origin

Gaddafi set out the Third Universal Theory in his Green Book (1975–1979) as a third way between capitalism and communism, in which the people rule directly through congresses and committees instead of parliaments and parties. After the revolution the Free Officers looked to Libya for a model. In 1983 the Leader visited Tripoli and Libyan advisers helped build the congress system. In 1984 the Leader published the booklet Der Kagundische Weg, which explains which ideas apply to Kagundi.

What Kagundi took from the Green Book

Idea from the Green Book	In Kagundi
"Representation is fraud": no parliament	The General People's Congress and People's Councils replace a parliament
Parties divide the people	Parties are not banned but cannot operate freely
Committees govern instead of ministers	The People's Committee, its Secretary-General and the secretariats; the names follow Libya
Workers and professions take part through their organisations	Council members are chosen through trade unions and professional organisations
"Partners, not wage-workers"	A slogan on posters only; wages, rent and private businesses stay legal because Kagundi depends on German trade and investment
The Leader guides, the people rule	The official doctrine of the Leader's role

In daily life

The Green Book is taught in schools in a German translation, and its slogans appear on posters and public buildings. The doctrine shapes the institutions and the language of the state, while the economy stays pragmatic and closely tied to Germany. The revolution's four reasons, from corruption to the order to fire on strikers, are part of every school curriculum.

OUT OF CHARACTER

Inside the Roblox game, use the Kagundian names and slogans rather than pictures of the real Gaddafi, since Roblox has rules on content about real political figures.

Security forces of Kagundi

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Kagundi has five security organisations, each with its own chain of command and its own place in the state.

Overview

Organisation	Reports to	Role	Base
City Police (Polizai)	Secretariat for Internal Affairs and Infrastructure	Patrols, traffic, public safety, arrests, evidence, ordinary crime, case files	Headquarters in Gundiville
Gendarmerie (Schandarm)	Armed forces, overseen by the Secretariat for Defence and Foreign Affairs	Militarily organised national police; lead on serious crimes and major incidents	National
Land Forces and Air Force	Secretariat for Defence and Foreign Affairs	National defence and military training	National
Revolutionary Guard	Leader of the Revolution	Protection of the Leader and Secretary-General, state facilities, state security, misconduct in the security services	Main barracks in Oberdueshuson
Intelligence Service	Revolutionary Guard	Terrorism, mass murder, attacks on critical infrastructure, serious threats to national security	National

Who handles a case

The seriousness of an offence decides which force takes the lead:

1. Ordinary offence
   City Police: theft, traffic, public order, assault.

2. Serious crime (Verbrechen)
   Gendarmerie takes the lead once involved, under the German-law-inspired classification.

3. Threat to the nation
   Intelligence Service: terrorism, mass murder, destruction of critical infrastructure.

! Misconduct by officers
   Revolutionary Guard investigates the security services themselves.

The Verbrechen category refers to the legal seriousness of an offence, not to the suspect's origin or nationality.

City Police

The City Police are Kagundi's everyday police. They patrol, enforce traffic rules, keep public order, make arrests, secure evidence and investigate ordinary crime. They prepare the case files, and an officer with a justice degree prosecutes their cases in court. The force has its own command structure under the Secretariat for Internal Affairs and Infrastructure; its headquarters is the main police station on the ceremonial avenue in Gundiville.

Gendarmerie

The Gendarmerie is a militarily organised national police force. It belongs to the armed forces, is overseen by the Secretariat for Defence and Foreign Affairs and has full police authority. It is more heavily organised than the City Police and takes the lead in serious crimes and major security incidents. It traces its origin to the Gendarmerie du Kagundi, founded by the French protectorate in 1923.

Land Forces and Air Force

The armed forces are responsible for national defence and military training. All men serve two years of basic military service without ordinary exemptions and remain registered as reservists for life. In wartime the Secretary-General decides whether women are also called up.

Revolutionary Guard

The Revolutionary Guard is a special military unit directly under the Leader of the Revolution. It was formed in 1983 around the Free Officers and the units that marched on Gundiville in May 1982, and it sees itself as the protector of the revolution. It protects the Leader and the Secretary-General, guards designated state facilities, carries out state-security tasks and investigates misconduct within the security services. Its members sit as judges in the Military Tribunal. Its main barracks, parade ground and training grounds are in Oberdueshuson.

Intelligence Service

The Intelligence Service is subordinate to the Revolutionary Guard. It handles the most serious cases: terrorism, mass murder, major destruction of critical infrastructure and serious threats to national security. Ordinary offences stay with the police unless their seriousness requires the Service.

Justice system of Kagundi

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

The justice system is run by the Secretariat for Internal Affairs and Infrastructure. It has two instances, plus a separate Military Tribunal. A defining feature is that town mayors, sitting as Maista, judge every ordinary case in the first instance.

How a case goes

Investigation
The responsible police force secures evidence and prepares the case file.

Charge
An officer of that force with a justice degree brings the prosecution.

First instance
The mayor of the town where the offence happened hears the case and gives judgment with a written reason.

Appeal
Either side may appeal within 72 hours.

Second instance
The appeals court in Stokondo decides.

Military Tribunal
Military offences and state-security crimes go here instead, with Revolutionary Guard judges.

First instance: the mayors

Mayors judge all ordinary cases in the first instance, from minor offences and civil disputes to serious crimes. A mayor sitting as judge is addressed as Maista. Rules of procedure:

- Which mayor: the mayor of the town where the offence took place; in civil disputes, the mayor of the town where the defendant lives or where the business is registered.
- Conflict of interest: a mayor may not judge a case in which they are a party, a witness, a relative, or an employer or business partner of a party. The Secretariat for Internal Affairs and Infrastructure then gives the case to another town's mayor.
- No degree needed: mayors need no justice degree to judge, but they are bound by the published legal code.
- Written record: every judgment is recorded with a short written reason in the judicial archive in Stokondo.

Second instance: Stokondo

The second instance hears appeals. Appeals must be filed within 72 hours of the first-instance judgment. Its judges are appointed by the responsible secretary. There is no career of professional judges, but a justice degree is expected and preferred for appointment. The court sits in Stokondo.

Military Tribunal

The Military Tribunal handles military offences and state-security crimes. Members of the Revolutionary Guard serve as judges, and only in this tribunal.

Lawyers and prosecutors

Defendants are assigned lawyers with a justice degree. The prosecution is brought by representatives of the police authority responsible for the case, who also need a justice degree. The degree is earned through the law programme of the national university in Gundiville. Because prosecutors come from the police, the City Police and the Gendarmerie each need at least one officer with a justice degree to bring cases to court.

Fines

The City Police, the Gendarmerie and judges can issue fines. A fine must be paid within three days and can be up to 50,000 KGD. Fines can be appealed like any other decision, and a judge can cancel a fine.

Economy of Kagundi

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Kagundi has a resource-based economy built on mining, forestry, agriculture and cattle, with transport, construction, retail, property and financial services around them. Private businesses and foreign investors work alongside state-majority-owned enterprises in strategic sectors.

Economy of Kagundi
Currency	Kagundi Dinar (KGD)
Economic day	Accounts are settled once a day at midnight
Exports	Gold, diamonds, palladium, timber, tobacco, beef
Imports	Fuel, food and essentials, construction materials
Partners	Germany (main), European Union, China
Minimum wage	150 KGD per day
Income tax	10%
Policy rate	6% (at launch)

Industries

Every business is registered in one of nine industries and pays a daily licence fee.

Industry	Produces	Licence fee per day (KGD)
Mining	Gold, diamonds, palladium	150
Financial services	Banking, lending, insurance brokerage	120
Timber and forestry	Timber	100
Tobacco farming	Tobacco	80
Cattle and beef	Beef	80
Construction	Buildings and infrastructure	70
Transport and freight	Haulage, deliveries, logistics	60
Retail and consumer services	Shops, restaurants, services	50

Industry	Produces	Licence fee per day (KGD)
Property management	Renting and managing buildings

Exports

Kagundi exports six commodities. World prices change every day within set limits, and the state charges an export duty on each sale.

Commodity	Unit	Where it comes from	Export duty
Gold	gram	Hills south-west of Kagundali	8%
Diamonds	carat	Hills south-west of Kagundali	10%
Palladium	gram	Western hills near Kagundali	8%
Timber	cubic metre	Forested hills between Gundiville and Stokondo	5%
Tobacco	kilogram	Highlands around Oberdueshuson	6%
Beef	kilogram	South-eastern lowland ranches	4%

Imports

Kagundi imports fuel, food and essentials, and construction materials. Because the country is landlocked, about 6% is added to world prices for transport and handling. Import tariffs at launch: fuel 5%, food and essentials 8%, construction materials 6%.

Trading partners

- Germany is the main partner. It supplies machinery and technology, invests in infrastructure and buys most commodities, paying the best prices.
- The European Union offers further markets and investment at slightly different prices.
- China sells the cheapest imports, but pays a little less for Kagundian exports.

Work and wages

Workers are paid per shift. Private employers must pay at least the minimum wage of 150 KGD and at most 2,500 KGD per day. Public servants are paid by the treasury according to the public pay scale. Income tax is withheld from every wage.

Taxes and fees

Tax or fee	Charged on	Rate at launch
Income tax	Every wage	10%
Turnover tax	Payments a business receives	5%
Distribution tax	Profit an owner withdraws from a business	10%
Property tax	Value of a property, per year, charged daily	1.5%
Transfer tax	Every property sale	2%
Business registration fee	Approval of a new business	1,000 KGD
Export duties and import tariffs	Trade (see above)	4–10%

The Secretariat for Economy and Education sets these rates within fixed limits. The current rates appear in the daily National Economic Report.

The state in the economy

Most of the state's holdings date from the nationalisation of the foreign mining concessions in 1984. The state holds majority stakes in strategic sectors but runs no business monopolies; it exerts its influence through its holdings, policy, regulation and administration. New businesses are approved by the business registry of the Secretariat for Economy and Education.

National Economic Report

Every day after midnight the Secretariat for Economy and Education publishes the National Economic Report. It is calculated from the day's actual figures: estimated output and growth, consumer prices and inflation, unemployment, the exchange rate and money stock, public revenue and spending, commodity prices, exports and imports by partner, credit conditions, business registrations, and an outlook. Estimates are marked as such. Unexpected events, such as a gold demand surge, a mine flooding, a drought or a German trade mission, can move prices and output for a few days.

Kagundi Dinar and banking

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

The Kagundi Dinar (KGD) is the currency of Kagundi. It replaced the Kagundi Franc in 1983, and its name follows the Libyan dinar as a sign of the revolutionary government's closeness to Libya.

Kagundi Dinar KGD
Introduced	1983
Replaced	Kagundi Franc
Named after	The Libyan dinar
Issuer	Central Bank of Kagundi
Exchange rate	About 10 KGD per euro at launch; floats daily
Nickname	Dina (Kagundisch for money)

History

Under the protectorate and the First Republic, Kagundi used the Kagundi Franc. The economic crisis of 1979–1981 destroyed much of its value and left soldiers and teachers unpaid, one of the causes of the revolution. In 1983 the revolutionary government introduced the Dinar.

Central Bank of Kagundi

The Central Bank works under the Secretariat for Economy and Education and is housed on the main square of Gundiville. It sets the policy rate, which was 6% at launch and can range from 0 to 25%. A higher rate makes loans more expensive and strengthens the Dinar. The exchange rate floats: it moves by at most 0.5% a day, weakening when the money supply grows quickly and strengthening with a high policy rate and a trade surplus. In an emergency the Central Bank can finance the treasury directly, which increases the money supply and inflation.

National Treasury

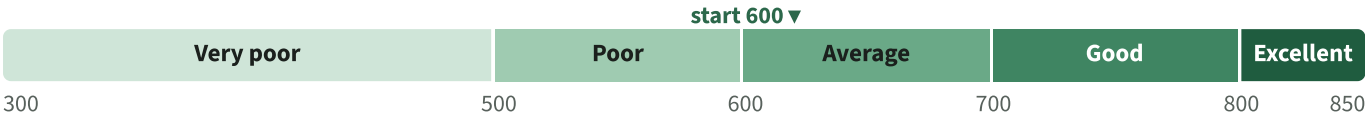

The National Treasury receives income tax, turnover and distribution tax, export duties and import tariffs, property and transfer taxes, registration and licence fees, fines, rents and sales of state property, and dividends from state-majority-owned companies. It pays public wages and spends on eleven budget lines: government and administration; police and Gendarmerie; defence and Revolutionary Guard; justice; healthcare and EMS; Brandwehr and civil protection; education; infrastructure; public services and AVK; public procurement; and other expenditure. Any single payment above 25,000 KGD needs the approval of a second official.

Banking

Every citizen has a bank account for wages, transfers and payments. Businesses have their own business accounts. Banks offer transfers, credit cards and personal loans, and invoices can be sent between citizens, businesses and the state. New citizens receive a one-time starting grant of 2,500 KGD.

Credit scores

Lenders use credit scores from 300 to 850. Every citizen starts at 600. The score rises with reliable payments and falls with missed ones, high debt and heavy use of credit.

Band	Score	Interest rate*	Largest loan (KGD)	Card limit (KGD)
Very poor	300–499	18%	none	none
Poor	500–599	14%	2,000	500
Average	600–699	10%	10,000	2,000
Good	700–799	7%	25,000	5,000
Excellent	800–850	5%	50,000	10,000

* At a policy rate of 6%. Loan rates move one-for-one with the policy rate and never fall below 1%.

Loans

- Loans need at least seven days of recorded income and a debt-to-income ratio of at most 35%.
- Terms run from 2 to 12 weeks with weekly instalments. A citizen may have at most two loans at a time.
- Loans up to 5,000 KGD are approved automatically; larger loans are decided by the credit office of the Secretariat for Economy and Education.
- A late instalment costs a fee of 2% (at least 10 KGD). After four missed instalments in a row the loan is in default.

AVK

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

AVK, the Allgemeine Volksversicherung Kagundi (General People's Insurance of Kagundi), is the state insurance provider. It complements the tax-funded public health system and insures individuals and businesses.

AVK
Allgemeine Volksversicherung Kagundi
English name	General People's Insurance of Kagundi
Type	State insurer
Oversight	Public services budget
Capital at launch	200,000 KGD
Products	Six

Products

Product	Premium	Deductible (KGD)	Cover
Vehicle insurance	0.05% of the insured value per day	500	Vehicles worth 1,000–250,000 KGD
Property insurance	0.01% of the value per day	1,000	Your own property, 5,000–2,000,000 KGD
Business insurance	0.02% of the value per day	1,000	Your own business, 5,000–1,000,000 KGD
Liability coverage	15 KGD per day	250	Up to 50,000 KGD
Accident insurance	10 KGD per day	0	Up to 20,000 KGD

Product	Premium	Deductible (KGD)	Cover
Supplementary health	12 KGD per day

Claims

A claim can be made once a policy has been active for at least two days. AVK officers review each claim and accept or reject it. A policy lapses after three days of unpaid premiums. Private health insurance is also allowed for extra benefits and private treatment.

Health and emergency services

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Kagundi has a tax-funded, single-payer public health system, supplemented by private clinics and private insurance. The Secretariat for Health and Crisis Management oversees healthcare, emergency medical services and the Brandwehr.

Hospitals and clinics

- The central hospital in Gundiville, with an ambulance bay and a helipad.
- Polyclinics in the major cities, most importantly in Stokondo.
- Smaller clinics in smaller towns and specialised private clinics.
- Regional emergency coordination.

Emergency Medical Services

EMS responds to medical emergencies and works with the hospitals, polyclinics, City Police, Gendarmerie and Brandwehr. Public and private providers take part, coordinated by region.

Brandwehr

The Brandwehr is the Fire and Civil Protection Service. Its firefighters, called Brandi in Kagundisch, handle building and industrial fires, road accidents, technical rescue, major industrial incidents, evacuations and public-safety emergencies, and they coordinate large-scale crises. The Crisis Response Center in Gundiville directs major emergencies together with EMS, the police and the Gendarmerie through shared emergency communications.

Insurance

The state insurer AVK offers supplementary health cover for private treatment as well as vehicle, property, business, liability and accident insurance.

Demographics of Kagundi

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

About nine in ten Kagundians are indigenous, most of them Gundi. German, Argentinian, French and Uruguayan communities make up the rest.

Population groups

Most indigenous Kagundians call themselves Gundi. Smaller highland communities keep their own clan names and traditions, but all share the Kagundisch language. Many Kagundians have mixed German and French ancestry. German-descended families have lived in the country since the colonial era and are over-represented in political office, partly because many Free Officers of 1982 came from German-descended officer families. The Argentinian and Uruguayan communities grew out of the recruitment of ranch managers, veterinarians and mining engineers from 1964.

Ancestry does not determine a person's citizenship, language, profession or politics.

Citizenship

Kagundi does not allow dual citizenship. Citizenship and naturalisation are handled by the country's legal institutions according to the law.

Languages

German and English are the official languages: German is the language of the state and its institutions, English the language of international contact. In everyday life most people speak Kagundisch, a German-based creole. It is not an official language, but it is the mother tongue of the indigenous majority and understood by everyone. Old Gundi survives only in songs, blessings and ceremonies.

Religion

Most Kagundians are Christian: Lutheran in the former German mission areas and Catholic in the former French ones. Many families also keep Old Gundi ancestor customs. The revolutionary state favours no church.

Kagundisch

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Kagundisch (English Kagundish, natively Gundisch) is the everyday language of Kagundi, a creole that grew from the simplified German used between Germans and local communities after 1885.

Kagundisch Gundisch
Type	German-based creole
Speakers	Most Kagundians; mother tongue of the indigenous majority
Status	Everyday language, not official
Vocabulary	German about 90%; French; Old Gundi
Origin	Contact language of mission schools, plantations and mines after 1885

Origin

Mission schools, plantations and mines used a simplified German as the common language between the colonists and the many local communities. The workers' children grew up with it as their first language, and it became a full creole language, much like Unserdeutsch in Papua New Guinea. Its words come from three layers: German (about nine in ten), French from the protectorate (mostly for administration and courtesy), and Old Gundi (place names, family names, ceremonies and a few grammar elements such as Ka-, ma- and -ali).

Sounds and grammar

Rule	German	Kagundisch	English
ü, ö, ä become i, e, e	Bürger, schön, Mädchen	Birger, schen, Medchen	citizen, nice, girl
ei becomes ai	Arbeit, klein	Arbait, klain	work, small
eu and äu become oi	heute, Leute	hoiti, Loiti	today, people
A final -e becomes -i	Schule, Danke, Bitte	Schuli, Danki, Bitti	school, thanks, please
ß becomes ss	weiß, Straße	weiss, Strassi	know(s), street
One article for every noun: di	der Mann, die Frau, das Haus	di Mann, di Frau, di Haus	the man, the woman, the house
Plural with the prefix ma-	Häuser, Kinder	ma-Haus, ma-Kind	houses, children
Verbs never change	ich gehe, du gehst, er geht	ich geh, du geh, er geh	I go, you go, he goes

Rule	German	Kagundisch	English
Past with ferti (from fertig)	ich habe gegessen	ich ferti ess	I have eaten
Future with wird	ich werde gehen	ich wird geh	I will go
Negation with nix	ich weiß nicht	ich nix weiss	I don't know
The suffix -ali means "great"	—	Hausali	great house

Everyday words

Kagundisch	From	Meaning
Gutag!	Guten Tag	Hello
Wi geht?	Wie geht's?	How are you?
Gut, mersi.	gut + French merci	Fine, thanks.

OUT OF CHARACTER

The Ro-Nation community speaks English. Kagundisch is flavour for greetings, nicknames and character speech; nobody has to learn it to play.

Culture of Kagundi

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

Kagundian culture stands on German foundations, with French and Old Gundi layers on top.

Names

Most Kagundians pair a German or French first name with a Gundi family name, such as Friedrich Kalembe, Marie-Luise Ondaru, Johann Masengi or Claudette Tumbalo. Gundi family names usually end in a vowel. Settler families keep German or French surnames, and Argentinian and Uruguayan families keep Spanish ones.

Religion

Most people are Christian, Lutheran in the former German mission areas and Catholic in the former French ones. Many families also keep Old Gundi ancestor customs, above all on Ahnentag. The revolutionary state favours no church.

Food and drink

- Brati: a grilled sausage of Kagundi beef, sold at street stands in every town.
- Maisknedel: maize dumplings, served with bean stew and fried plantain.
- Kaffi und Kuchi: strong, sweet highland coffee with cake, the Sunday afternoon family tradition.

Music

Trommelblas mixes colonial brass-band marches with Gundi drums. It is played at weddings, festivals and state parades, above all on Revolution Day.

Customs

Punctuality and correct paperwork count as civic virtues. The saying "Ohne Stempel nix" ("nothing without a stamp") is common, and officials are addressed by title, as in Herr Sekretär or Frau Maista. A stranger is politely addressed as Birger, citizen.

Education

Education falls under the Secretariat for Economy and Education. Schools teach in German, and the Green Book is taught in German translation. Vocational training prepares workers for the mines, farms and trades. The national university in Gundiville runs the country's law programme, which grants the justice degree required of lawyers and prosecutors.

Public holidays

Date	Holiday	Occasion
12 May	Revolution Day	The 1982 revolution; military parade in Gundiville
8 June	Streiktag	Remembrance of the 1917 Kagundali Strike
First Sunday in October	Erntefest	Tobacco and maize harvest
2 November	Ahnentag	Ancestors' day, joined with All Souls' Day
22 November	Independence Day	Independence in 1960

National symbols of Kagundi

From the Kagundi Encyclopedia

National flag

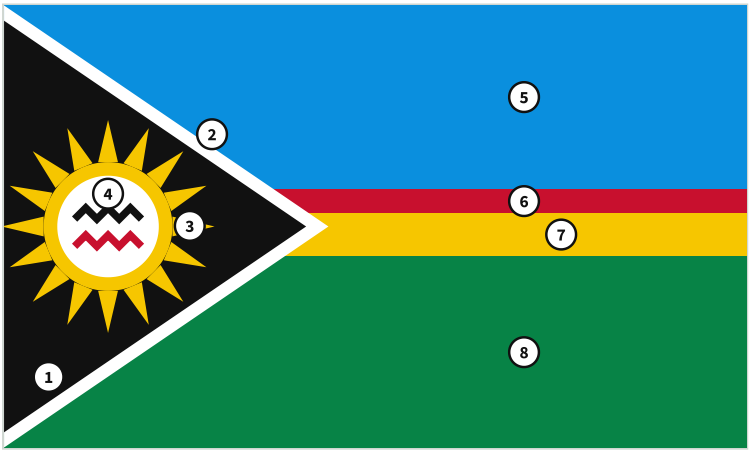

National emblem

Flag

The national flag was introduced after the 1982 revolution. It has a black triangle at the hoist, edged in white. The rest of the flag is divided horizontally into a blue upper band, a narrow red stripe above a yellow stripe, and a green lower band. Inside the triangle, a rayed yellow sun surrounds a white disc with two zigzag lines, black above red.

What the flag means

1. Black triangle: the Kagundian people.
2. White edge: peace and unity between Kagundi's communities.
3. Yellow sun: the dawn of 12 May 1982 and the revolution.
4. Zigzag lines: an Old Gundi pattern for the mountains and rivers of the highlands.
5. Blue: the sky over the highlands.
6. Red: the blood of the 1917 Kagundali strikers and of the revolution.
7. Yellow: gold and the country's mineral wealth.
8. Green: forests, farmland and pastures.

Emblem

The national emblem places the flag's design in a circle inside a gold ring. It appears as a seal on government documents, uniforms, vehicles and public buildings.

Other symbols

- National day: Revolution Day, 12 May.
- Seat of power: the Hausali and the General People's Congress on the main square of Gundiville, with the statue of the Leader between them.
- Heroes: the strikers of Kagundali (1917) and the Free Officers (1982).

OUT OF CHARACTER

The round national emblem is also the Ro-Nation logo.

Playing in Ro-Nation

OUT OF CHARACTER

Ro-Nation is a government roleplay on Roblox, set in Kagundi, with a mid-to-hardcore level of realism and room for about 20 to 25 players at a time. The Discord server is the community's home for announcements, recruitment, business registration, support and government communication.

Getting started

1. Join the Discord
   Read #welcome and #rules.
2. Verify
   Press the button in #verify to unlock the server.
3. Become a citizen
   Pick the Civilian role in #start-here and open your bank account with `/bank balance`.
4. Find your path
   Look for work with `/jobs`, start a business, or apply to a faction in #faction-applications.

What you can do

- Civilian life: find a job, earn a salary, rent or buy a home, manage your bank account and loans, start a business (up to two) and hire other players. You do not need to join a faction to matter.
- Public service: join the government, City Police, Gendarmerie, Land Forces, Air Force, Revolutionary Guard, Intelligence Service, justice, EMS or Brandwehr. Each has its own chain of command, and faction leaders assign ranks.
- A persistent world: money, property, businesses and records carry over between sessions. The economy settles every day at 00:00 Berlin time, and the National Economic Report appears daily in #national-economic-report. Character resets happen only with the Owner's agreement.

Economy commands

Command	What it does
`/bank`	Balance, transfers, cash, statement, credit score (only you can see it)
`/work`, `/jobs`	One paid shift per day; job board, applications, resignations
`/business`	Register and run a business: staff, stock, imports and exports
`/invoice`	Bills between citizens, businesses and the state
`/loan`, `/card`	Loans and credit cards

Command	What it does
`/insurance`	AVK policies and claims
`/property`	Rent, buy and sell property
`/fine`	See and pay your fines
`/economy`	Economic overview, prices, past reports, public finances

Rules in short

- No metagaming or powergaming.
- No abuse of economic mechanics.
- No impersonating staff and no misuse of Discord permissions.
- No using in-game authority just to disrupt other players.

The government in the story is authoritarian, but real moderation stays with the server staff. The community speaks English; German titles and Kagundisch words add flavour, and nobody needs to learn them. The Leader of the Revolution is played by the Owner, and the round national emblem is also the Ro-Nation logo.

Kagundi and all its people, places and events are fictional and belong to the Ro-Nation roleplay on Roblox. Edition 2 · 26 October 2026.
